THE CHAUTAUQUA CIRCLE.

How the "School at Home" Has Devel oped and Flourished in the District.

It was a protty and a wise idea, that of the access was immediate, far beyond the fondest imaginings of its founders. Reports from the office secretary at Plainfield, N. J., already show that local circles exist not only in the continental world, but even in the isles of the sea. It is a school at home where instruction is so mingled with social enjoyments that study has been robbed of its ancient terrors and almost a "royal road to learning" found. The idea has taken firm root in Washington, and the growth and influence of the C. L. S. A. in this district is a study at once interesting and instructive.

influence of the C. L. S. A. in this district is a study at once interesting and instructive. Prior to October, 1880, there was no organized local circle in the district. About the beginning of said month eight reachers in the public colored schools of this city, after investigating the idea, concluded to join the circle. With the exception of one the class then formed will be graduated in June next. Many local circles have since been formed, prominent among them being the Washington circle, the Foundry circle, the Parker circle, the Dunbarton street circle, the Bancircle, the Dunbarton street circle, the Banneker circle, and the Israel circle. All of the others are growing rapidly.

Dr. Vincent, when here last spring, gave an interesting talk at Foundry church. A union of the several circles of the district was con-templated to welcome him, but for various easons only a semi-organization was brought reasons only a semi-organization was brought about. As Dr. J. L. Hurthut, a prominent worker in the C. L. S. C., will conduct the Sanday School Teachers' institute at Congregational church next week, it is in contemplation to perfect the union contemplated when Dr. Vincent was here, and give a musical and literary entertainment in one of the central churches of the city in honor of the founder of the city. founder of the circle.

Judge Wylle and the Jury. Yesterday in the criminal court, in the case of Bernard Neumeyer charged with keeping an unlicoused bar, the jury after being out sometime sent word that they could not agree, Judge Wylie sent for them and stated that they were not satisfied with the manner in which the case had been made up,

The court expressed indignation that men employed in the detection of crime should be so treated, and added that senety would soon have cause to regret it. The only defense in many of these cases was in the denurciation of the officers of the law, and he intended to stop it.

The foreman explained that the difficulty was with the witness employed, not with the witness employed, not with the officers. The judge said the jury of course has the right to discredit witnesses, but they should not do so because they were employed to be merchant marine, and to the life-saving service and lighthouses. sinnees would not permit it, and discharged

THE MEXICAN WAR VETERANS.

How Col. Greusel Obeyed the Order to Quarter His Men on the Sidewalk. Among the list of delegates in attendance at the convention of veterans of the Mexican war appears the name of Col. Nicholas Grousel, of Iowa. He recruited a company Michigan volunteers, serving under Gen. Scott. After peace was declared the regiment returned home via Chicago and the lakes. Of course after the long campaign and the loager journey the soldiers did not, as respects neatness of attire, present as good an appearance as when they left for the field. Col. Grensel while in Chicago bought outfits of shirts, white gloves, shoe blacking, &c., and when the steamer was near Detroit the boys stripped, washed, and donned their clean clothes. The late Gen. Alpheus S, Williams was colonel of the regiment, and when he saw the neat appearance of Grensel's men ordered him to take the right of the line in the street parade home, though company cott. After peace was declared the regiment the street parade home, though company D was not otherwise entitled to it. Col. Grousel served during the late war, first as major of the 7th Illinois and subsequently as colonel of the 36th Illinois. subsequently as colonel of the 36th Illinois. He was temporarily sent in command of Davis's division from the field in Mississippi to the protection of Cincinnati against Bragg. The veterans arrived in the panie stricken city late at night. The arrival of the division was reported to Gen. Low Wallace, in command of the city, with a request to assign quarters. Gen. Wallace, under the misapprehension that itiwas a re-enforcement of "squirrel hunters," by whom he had been much troubled, answered hastily that they might quarter themselves on the sidewaalk. The answer was conveyed to Greusel, whose voice, then one of the most sonorous conceivable, rang out with the sharp commands which at once set the entire division on the march for the railway station again. Gen. march for the railway station again. Gen. Wallace heard it in the recesses of his head-quarters in the second story of the old Bur-nott house, and at once hastened an orderly not house, and at once hastened in orderly to convey his regrets with an invitation to Col. Greusel to halt his troops. The result was that they were comfortably quartered and had a royal supper furnished them. Next day they paraded the streets, and taking position on the surrounding heights soon caused the people of Cincinnati to feel secure.

WHY THE TAILORS ENLIST.

The United States Recruiting Office Anxious for Men Who Can Sew as Well

"Wanted 150 Tailors" is the head-line of a large poster in front of the recruiting head-Chautauqua Literary Social circle, and its quarters on F street. It attracted the attention of a REPUBLICAN reporter who was passing by. Entering the rendezvous, he met and asked the recruiting corporal, "do you enlist many tailors here?"
"Yes," he replied, "more than a person would suppose."
"What particular inducements do you offer a man with such a fair paying trade?"

queried the reporter.

"Well, of corse, they are compelled to en-list as private soldiers, at $13 per month.

This doen'st sound much like a financial snap, but it's a mighty poor army tailor who cannot clear $100 extra every thirty days. You see all army clothing issued now is unmade, and the making of it falls to the company tailor, who is nearly always exempted from military duty. Yes, sir, the place of an army tailor is a genuine sinccure."

The plaintif sues for $15,000 damages for malicious prosecution and false imprisonment. Costello was charged by Knight with having forged a bond to release a mechanical lien on his property, and he was arrested on two charges, both of which were dismissed in the police court. Knight, then it is claimed, caused Costello's indictment by the grand jury. As was tried before Judge Wylio a short time since and acquitted.
